Angels*

Background

Objective: Create a baseline of people's belief in the existence of angels worldwide, and of those who believe, identify the primary angelic encounters.

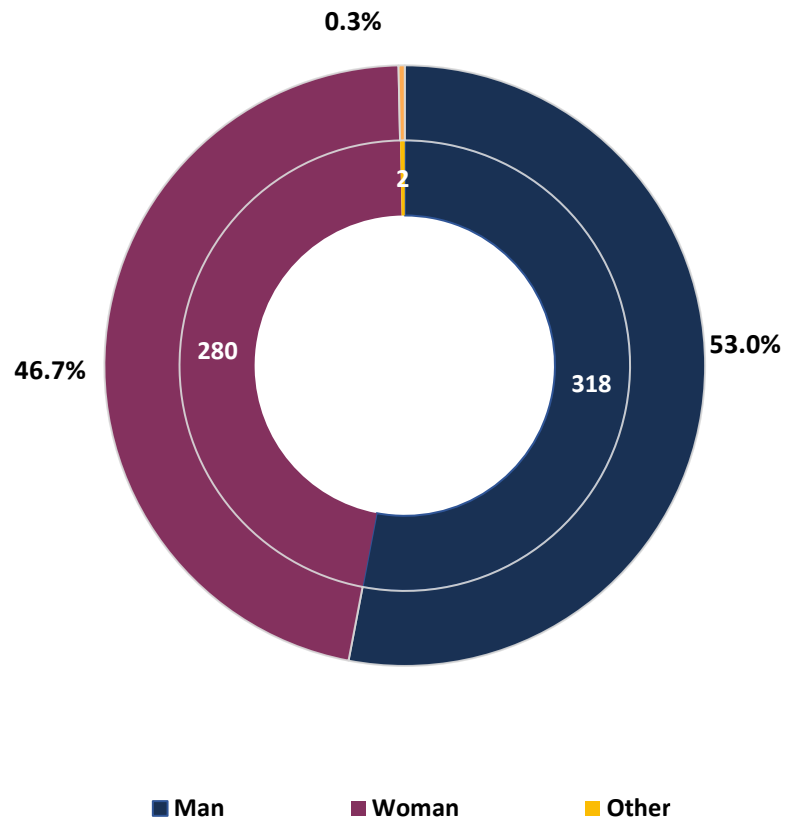

Conducted late 2022 into early 2023, the study included 800 participants from various countries around the world with results compiled in 2023.

Participants were asked demographic questions, including the question, "Do you believe in angels?" Those who indicated "No" were screened out of the study, and those who answered "Yes" continued to several questions about their knowledge and beliefs about angels.

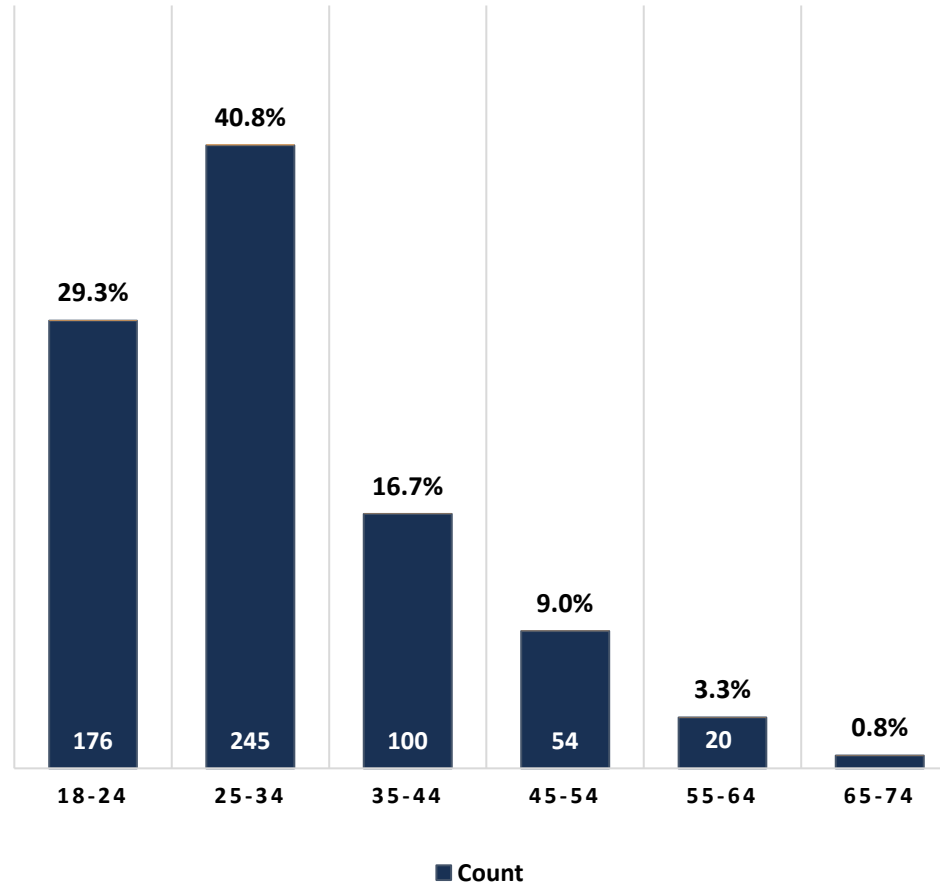

The study was administered through Testable (Testable.org), an organization that enables researchers to administer psychological experiments and surveys using a participant pool of over 65,000 international participants.

Summary

Numerous polls and studies show that belief in angels remains strong worldwide. Although thousands of individual stories and anecdotal reports provide fascinating accounts of celestial interventions, research into the types of interactions has been minimal.

This study, while including a modest number of participants, provides data that points to the need for further research in this fascinating area.
